Road Safety Information

The Road Users’ Code provides general information on safety and road traffic regulations. Acting as a resource guideline for road safety training officers, teachers and parents, the Code is available to the general public and over the Internet, on Transport Department’s Homepage. This information is supplemented by a wide range of leaflets and pamphlets, produced and distributed to the public on a range of road safety subjects. These items are constantly updated and new material is added as necessary — for example when new legislation takes place, material, in conjunction with public awareness programmes, is prepared to keep the public informed of these new developments. Road safety bulletins also provide valuable information on road safety to drivers.

Improving Driver Skills and Behaviour

To improve the quality of driving in Hong Kong, we continue with our ongoing initiatives, sharing information on test requirements and common mistakes made by drivers, in regular liaison meetings with driving instructor associations, driving school operators and the Transport Department.

The Transport Department and Hong Kong Police also regularly organise road safety seminars for bus and other professional drivers, as well as companies with large vehicle fleets. These seminars focus on traffic accident statistics, common accident factors, smart driving skills, the correct road manners, road safety and accident blackspots. In addition, Hong Kong’s different road and motorist associations also hold programmes to improve driving skills and manners.
